CHICAGO, Ill. (June 6, 2018) – The Museum of Science and Industry, Chicago (MSI) is pleased to announce that Anthony Vitagliano has joined MSI as vice president of exhibitions and engagement. Vitagliano will assume his new role on June 11, and report to David Mosena, president and chief executive officer.

“Anthony’s demonstrated success in creating experiences across a wide range of industries will help accelerate MSI’s transition to become a museum for the future,” said Mosena. “His proven track record in creating engagement between people and brands will continue to elevate our reputation as a world-class institution in a city renowned for its cultural offerings.”

Vitagliano will oversee the Exhibitions and Collections division, which is responsible for creating and designing exhibits, as well as the care of the museum’s collection of 35,000 artifacts. Vitagliano joins MSI from Digital Kitchen, a Chicago-based creative content and experience agency, where he served as president and chief creative officer since early 2017. Vitagliano started at Digital Kitchen in 2003 as director of experience design, creating award-winning work for clients, including The Cosmopolitan of Las Vegas, Warner Bros., Carnival Cruise Line, and HBO. He resides in the western suburbs with his wife and two children.

Vitagliano was selected after a nationwide search led by Koya Leadership Partners, a national retained executive search firm dedicated exclusively to serving clients in the nonprofit sector.
